Review

"Michael Singer has produced an essential primer on prison rape in the United States, exploring the empirical, legal, and socio-cultural dimensions of the phenomenon. He elegantly combines technical detail with the human element, moving seamlessly between the social science research that documents the magnitude of the problem and the heartbreaking stories of individual victims that underscore its urgency. In a country that prides itself on its commitment to justice, Singer suggests, the persistence of prison rape is an ongoing source of national shame. This accessible account is an invaluable resource for scholars, policy makers, and anyone interested in prison reform." (Mary Sigler, Professor of Law, Arizona State University College of Law)

"This is an outstanding work that illuminates a terrifying problem in American jails and prisons that merits more attention and discussion than this well-researched book finally provides." (Bryan A. Stevenson, Executive Director, Equal Justice Initiative, Montgomery, Alabama, and Professor of Clinical Law, New York University School of Law)

"With singular clarity, Michael Singer reviews the Department of Justice's efforts to bring about desperately needed reforms to address prison rape in American prisons. He is similarly adept in reviewing prisoners' constitutional protections and legal obstacles in seeking redress for prison rape. Throughout the book, Singer interweaves the documented testimony of men and women who have experienced prison rape. The book leads up to an elucidation of the national standards to eliminate prison rape released by the US attorney general in 2012. While praising the content of these standards, Singer raises disturbing concerns about the DOJ's true commitment to ending prison rape. This book is a must-read for those in the public, corrections, the legal system, human rights, and academe who desire to bring an end to rape in American prisons." (Cindy Struckman-Johnson, PhD, Professor of Psychology, University of South Dakota, Prison Rape Researcher, Former Member of the National Commission to Eliminate Prison Rape)
