Editorial Review

Review

"Shows how well-established but easily-forgotten findings of traditional development administration are merging with experimental and innovative programs as governments mobilize to deal with globalization, to re-invent themselves, and to address massive domestic injustice."

"Offers readers experience, perspectives, analyses, proposals, and ideas they will not find anywhere else on central, important matters having a bearing on everyone."

"An excellent and coherent series of readings, which provide both conceptual models and practical lessons of experience relating to the dynamic opportunities and challenges of building the capacities for a competent state in an era of globalization."

"Full of innovative ideas, this volume stands out as exceptionally well informed, lucid, and measured. A most useful reading for all those concerned with the role of the state in the era of globalization."

"The authors and editors have forged a rare, coherent narrative illuminating the state as a competent, adaptable partner linking global with local governance for navigating this new century."
